vMAPs Model Profile | April 2017

Commentary

"Elections, elections, elections" as goes the market hyperbole. There is no doubt that sentiment in April was dominated by the perceived election relief in France and the U.K. surprise announcement of a snap election in early June. This created a tale of two halves for the month, with initial nervousness for the European Union turning into optimism. Expressly, the first round of the French elections proceeded according to the polls, meanwhile Theresa May is generally expected to solidify the Tories' lead in the Commons and tighten her grip on Brexit negotiations. This gave sterling and the euro a welcome boost, jumping more than 3% and 2% respectively against the US dollar. This seemed to overwhelm most other developments, with Donald Trump's tax reform proposal lacking sufficient detail to move markets and geopolitical tension in a continual state of flux. On the data front, a strong divide became noted in the 'hard versus soft' data debate, with hard data generally disappointing, at least temporarily. Particularly, U.S. Q1 GDP growth came in at a three-year low of 0.7% (quarter-on-quarter annualised) which was a stark contrast to business and consumer confidence surveys that remain near cyclical highs.

For equity markets, it all seemed to come back to geopolitical uncertainty, with a positive interpretation of the French election first round result boosting returns at the end of the month. The European markets shifted into overdrive as 'risk-on' selections such as the banks and even Greek equities rose sharply. In the U.K., the currency impact also contributed to a large divide supporting domestically-oriented mid and small cap companies over large caps. However, when considered in aggregate, both developed market and emerging market equities posted subdued returns that ended negative in sterling terms (while mildly positive in US dollar terms).

This long-term, valuation driven approach is underpinned by an emphasis on preserving capital and undertaking meticulous comprehensive fundamental analysis of global asset classes and securities.

Portfolio Construction Process

When building diversified portfolios to achieve long-term real returns (after fees and taxes), a dynamic approach to asset allocation improves the outcome for investors. A total-portfolio-perspective approach that seeks to adjust the portfolio when the reward for risk changes, and measures risk in a more meaningful way to preserve capital for investors, is expected to provide a more stable and improved path to wealth accumulation. This approach is often contrarian to market consensus with patience and discipline provides significant investment opportunities.

Security Selection

Buying shares of superior businesses and allowing them to compound over time is the surest way to create wealth in the stock market. The long-term fundamentals of businesses, such as cash flow, competition, economic cycles, and stewardship, are the primary focus because history has shown that market sentiment is fleeting, momentum can quickly reverse, and the herd is sometimes a dangerous crowd. Occasionally, this approach causes our investment models to appear out of step, but willingness to be contrarian is an important source of outperformance.
